THE ABOUT PAGE REWRITE MAP

Turn biography into trust, taste, and buyer confidence.

BY MK PARRISH

HOW TO USE THIS

Your About page has one job: make a stranger trust the person behind the work.

Not because you listed every credential. Not because you performed humility. Not because you wrote "passionate about helping people" and hoped no one noticed.

Because the page makes your judgment, scars, standards, taste, and proof legible.

Use this map to rewrite the page in layers. Start raw. Then make it useful.

“

The About page is not where you become impressive. It is where you become believable.

1. THE REAL OPENING

Bad opening: "I am a results-driven professional with a passion for..."

Better opening: "I learned the hard way that..."

The page should begin closer to the truth. Name the tension that shaped the work. What did you notice before other people noticed it? What problem kept following you until it became your craft?

Prompt: I do this work because I got tired of watching...

2. THE BEFORE

Readers do not trust a polished identity until they understand what it cost.

You do not need trauma theater. You need context. What were you before the current version of you? What did you have to learn, leave, rebuild, or stop pretending?

Prompt: Before I knew how to do this, I kept seeing...

3. THE RECEIPTS

Raw story without proof can feel indulgent. Proof without story can feel sterile.

Put the receipts close to the claim:

- years in the field
- industries crossed
- money influenced
- systems built
- pages rewritten
- people helped
- results repeated

Prompt: The proof that this is not just a point of view is...

4. THE STANDARD

A strong About page says what you refuse to do.

This is where trust gets built. Standards create edges. Edges make people feel the difference between you and everyone else selling a version of the same thing.

Prompt: I will not build work that...

5. THE METHOD

Your story should lead to your process.

If you are a writer, how do you hear what others miss? If you are a strategist, how do you decide what matters? If you are a builder, how do you move from idea to shipped work?

Prompt: The way I work is simple: first I..., then I..., then I...

6. THE HUMAN DETAIL

The specific detail is the thing people remember.

Not "I love storytelling." Everyone says that.

Try the library card at three. The notebook full of rewritten endings. The mentor who told you the sentence was too sharp and you kept it anyway. The job where you realized the prettiest deck in the room meant nothing if no one bought.

Prompt: The detail that explains me better than a resume is...

7. THE BUYER BRIDGE

Do not end with yourself. End with what your story helps the reader do.

The reader should understand why your lived experience, standards, and method make you useful to them now.

Prompt: If you are here because..., I can help you...

THE STRUCTURE

Use this order:

1. Open with the real tension.
2. Name what shaped your eye.
3. Show proof without flattening the voice.
4. State your standards.
5. Explain how you work.
6. Add one unforgettable human detail.
7. Point the right person to the next step.

That is enough.

LINES TO CUT

Cut anything that sounds like:

- "I am passionate about..."
- "I help people thrive..."
- "With a unique blend of..."
- "I have always loved..."
- "In today's fast-paced world..."
- "My mission is to empower..."

If a thousand people could write it, it does not belong on the page.

THE FINAL TEST

Read the page out loud.

If you sound like you are applying for permission, rewrite it.

If you sound like you are hiding behind credentials, rewrite it.

If you sound like a real person with standards, proof, and something at stake, keep going.

That is the page.
