THE INVISIBLE BRUISE

If someone hits you, there's a mark. People understand a mark.
They bring you ice, they ask who did it, they believe you because the evidence is right there on your skin.

Emotional abuse leaves no mark. That's the whole problem.
You walk around carrying an injury that doesn't show up in any mirror, and you start to wonder if you imagined the whole thing. You didn't.
