A luminous, present-tense memoir about fear, faith, and the courage to walk through a door you were told was not for you. In ten chapters, MK Parrish moves from a rainy set of church steps to a roomful of women who became the great loves of her life, and takes apart, gently, the lie that any of it was ever off-limits to you. A book about losing your fear without losing yourself, and becoming the latest model of the person you always were.
